

- It's good. Upside: -I'm smart-I get a good GPA
Downside:-"Am I too smart?" -Not normal. -???
- I like being talented. It is good to know I am good at everything that I do. Well actually, no matter how many things you do, you won't be perfect. So when i learn that I am talented at something, I am usually really happy. Basketball is one of my talents, so whenever I do something well, I am really proud of what I did. Sometimes people ask me how I can be so good at things, at that makes things awkward
- It is usually good to be talented because you get the things that you can handle instead of sitting in class all day bored. The only con is everyone expects so much out of you.
- Upside. You do a little better on tests than normal people. You get compliments. Downside. You get teased about being a nerd. People want test answers from you.
- It is awesome to be talented. I love being smart, but I feel bad for the ones that aren't the best at some subjects. I love proving to people that I am not just a stupid blonde like people see me as.
- It feels good and very rewarding, because it makes you feel like you've achieved as much as you can possibly achieve, and your smartness has been noticed.
- Its on the upside cause u can do something that other people cant do that good
- it is fun to be talented because then sometimes you get to show off.

- I don't really think I'm talented just that I like school so I succeed. The good part is that I'm getting good grades and getting a challenge. The bad part is that I don't have all my friends in the same class.
- I don't see myself as talented. I see myself the way I see my friends. The downside of it is that my friends that are not in say things that make me feel like it's a bad thing to be in TAG
- Well, I don't feel like I'm different from other kids, talent-wise. It's more like I enjoy certain subjects, so I work hard and get good grades in them. Also, I like to get good grades, so I work hard in school. It's not really like I'm so much smarter than everyone else
- It feels upside because you feel good but, others would feel bad because others would feel bad or like there not smart.
- To be talented is a upside, there is no downside of being talented. The upside is you know more about life and other school stuff. It's like being in a half grade like, sixth and a half. Sometimes I don't think I'm talented but I can see in some topics like math and art. There's no way anyone who could be sad or mad about being talented.
- it is fun to be in the gifted group. the bad part of it is that some people think you are geeks because you are two grades ahead of everybody. the good side of it is that the work that we do is more challenging. it also feels good to think that I have made it into the gifted group and have the advantage so I can get into a better college like Madison or Marquette.

dislike you.

- upside it is amazing because then u have a chance to be a pro basketball ,football,or baseball player if u are talented at those kind of sports. its awesome to be talented because if somebody is a bully or something like that u can challenge them to a basketball game and beat him or something like that.
- It feels good that I am talented and I like that I get the chance to learn more than other people
- The upside is that you get good grades and will do well in school, but you also become unpopular, a nerd, a geek, a loser. You become lucky to have any friends at all.
- It is good to have some talent but if you have too much talent you will be a showoff with no friends
- One upside is that you get to go on alot of fun field trips. One downside is that there is a lot of projects, and many assignments.
- It is extremely fun to be talented. Its a lot of fun to know things and surprise others with your knowledge. Sometimes people get jealous or mad that you are more talented than them.
- to be talented in my opinion is to be above the average.for some talented people this might make the thing they are talented in easier.For some others this may not be the case maybe they just like to do what they are talented in.
- If you are talented in math or any other school subject then it is a little of both. Mostly because it is good to be smart but then most people make fun of you because you are smart. If you are talented in something like dance or any other special thing like that then it is on the upside because you can learn something different that some people don't know.

- I think I am a little bit smarter than everyone else, probably because I read so much. The upside is that I have a good chance of getting into a good college, but a downside is that a lot of people don't understand what TAG is at first, so you have to explain that it is not the game tag. I think that is the only downside.
- It's just like being a normal kid, except being a little smarter and helping everyone out. The upsides of being talented is that you get stuff a lot faster than other kids do, and you get a lot of friends. The downsides are that everyone thinks you're different than them, and they treat you as a challenge you have to beat for tests, homework, etc. You also get made fun of a lot easier.
- I like that people know I'm smart. Kids coming up to me asking for help or my teacher telling the students to come to me for help.
- The good thing is that I get to miss my English class twice a week. The bad thing is that I then miss that day's lesson, and have to make up that day's work, which gets to be annoying. All in all being talented is a good thing. I get to learn things that I wouldn't get to in a regular classroom.
- It is good because things in school are easier, and you know you will get into a good college. I don't really have a downside except when you miss some work